Music and dancing till the stroke of twelve ended one of the most enjoyable evenings ever spent in the lodge room.

Emma J. Gard, Reporter.

Our brother and sister have decided to leave us,
The parting of friends doth always grieve us.
They are leaving our clime
For old lands sublime,
Where primroses grow in profusion,
Where women are facing confusion,
Where coal is so dear,
They will get chilly I fear,
And arrive at the conclusion
That with old California they will again make fusion.

My memory today of those hedges of May,
Of daisies and buttercups too,
Make me think of that land that I love to this day,
While the red, white and blue so noble and true,
And this my home by adoption I love,
Yet the home of my birth to my memory so dear,
I am glad it was there, yet I'm glad that I'm here.

So bon voyage my friends, good luck to you all,
Is the wish of this Council tonight,
And when you return to the land of the blest,
We will try and treat you all right.

SUCCESSFUL ENTERTAINMENT

The High School musical and dramatic entertainment, given Thursday evening, was a decided success. The students were favored, as usual, with a full house. The songs by the triple quartet were greatly appreciated, especially "Our Jack." Mrs. Ross at the piano and Mrs. Pixley vocalist were both at their best and responded to hearty encores. The shadow pantomime was a unique affair well acted and heartily enjoyed by the audience. The drama "The White Dove of Oneida," was given by four young ladies. Miss Mary Clark made a beautiful picture as the Colonial officers wife, at the spinning wheel; Miss Vaudine Putnam was a graceful "pleasing and teasing" little daughter of the house; the part of Tiorata, Indian squaw, wife of Black Eagle, could not have been acted better. The make-up and expression of Miss Collins in this part were excellent. She is unusually talented in this line of work; Miss Mamie Coupland as "The White Dove" was well received. Altogether it was a splendid program and well deserving of the good support it received.

MAKING PROFIT WITH SHEEP

Man Who Kept Flock Through Winter Made $7.20 Per Head Out of the Wool and Crop of Lambs.

Ten years ago I had a flock of fifty high-grade Merino lambs. Being short of hay, I offered them for sale directly after weaning. A feeder came to look at them, liked them first rate and asked my price. I said $3 each." "Can't give it," he said. "Ain't heavy enough; give you $2.50." I said, "We'll not quarrel about that at all; if you can't pay $3 you can't buy them." I finally kept them through, sheared them and the wool and lambs brought me $7.20 per head, says a writer in the Ohio Farmer.

A neighbor bought in the late fall 32 ewes and wethers for $65. He fed them 100 days. The roughness fed was a stack of oat straw and two small loads of corn stalks. The grain fed was 100 bushels of oats. The straw was worth more worked down under the feet of the sheep as manure than it could possibly have been sold for. The man himself said $5 would have been a good price for the two jags of cornstalks and the 100 bushels of oats would have sold for $40. This made the cost of the sheep $65, $5, $40, or $110. Two of the sheep died during the winter and he sold the pelts for $2, and he sold the 30 remaining for $150, making the receipts $152, leaving a balance in favor of the sheep of $42. The man considered himself well paid for the winter care of the sheep.

I have lived the three score and ten years allotted to man. I think I have been a tolerably close observer of the methods of my brother farmers, both the successful and the unsuccessful ones, and I can't now call to mind a single one who always kept a good flock of sheep, right along through periods of depression and low prices just the same as through times of activity and high prices, who wasn't successful and prosperous.

CATTLE, HOGS OR CHICKENS?

You will have to descide for yourself whether it will be most profitable to raise cattle, hogs or sheep; ducks, chickens or turkeys.

Of course, for the man who makes these sources of income merely a side line to his main business, say farming, it is well to have a few of each probably two or three cows, half a dozen or a dozen hogs and one or two hundred chickens. These make a constant income which, though small, will be found sufficient to provide most of the living expenses of an average family.

For the man who specializes in any kind of stock raising, the profit depends on two things: location and the taste of the individual. What might be profitable in one place might be a complete failure in another, because of the distance from market, expense of procuring proper food and other things. One man may make a great success with sheep while another at the same place will fail utterly because he dislikes the handling of sheep.

"Pure-bred animals and fowls are not profitable for the man who derives his profit from the produce of his herd and flock," says E. H. Webster, dean of agriculture and director of the experiment station at the Kansas Agricultural college. "The cost of procuring pure-bred animals is much higher than that of ordinary animals, and the produce, as a rule, is not enough better in quantity and quality to pay interest on the greater investment.

"However, the herd should contain or have access to a pure-bred sire and thus raise its standard by degrees and with but little extra cost."

Helps for the Dairyman.

One thing ought always to be considered when men start out to buy pure-bred cattle. That is that the knowledge, skill and character of the man who bred them are about as important as are the animals they are to buy.

Expand your feed supply with a silo. It is not the gross income, but the et profits that measure the success a dairy business.

BEN'S COURTSHIP

By LEONARD W. GROSSMAN

"I suppose you want to be one of the vice-presidents, at least," grunted Stephen Gower, as he looked up at Ben Meade.

"In the course of time, yes," said Ben easily. "I've an idea I could make a very good vice-president. Meanwhile I suppose that it's switching or something like that. I don't want a clerkship."

Gower sprang up with beaming face. "My dear boy," he said warmly, "I have had a hundred sons of old friends ask me for chances. Every one wanted to start at the top. You're the first one to want to begin at the right end. Come to dinner tonight and I'll have a letter for you to give the division superintendent."

Meade made acknowledgment and slipped out of the office. He had just completed his college course and the trip to Europe that had followed it. He had a preference for railroading and his father had sent him to Gower, president of the B. Y. & A. Mabel Gower was waiting in the passenger room to hear the result of the interview. She was a little worried for she knew how her father felt toward those who came to him with letters.

"What luck?" she asked as he came toward her.

"Bully," he answered briefly. "I can come to dinner this evening and he'll put me on somewhere."

The dinner was his first appearance at the Gower home and Mabel beamed as she saw what a good impression he made upon her father. She was moved to seek to take advantage of it when he had left.

"You are sending Mr. Meade out to the Carson division?" she asked. "I should think you could use him here in the office."

"I could," said her father. "I could use him in the office and he'd be an office boy to the end of his days. Leave him alone, daughter. He's under a hard master in Danvers, but if there's anything in the lad old Charley Danvers will bring it out. The boy has started in right. Don't hinder him."

Ben soon found for himself that Danvers was a hard master. He demanded the best that was in a man and somehow he managed to get it out of them.

He was prejudiced against Ben because he had come with a letter and for the first three months his work as wiper in the Carson roundhouse was that of an inferno. Ben bore it patiently, there was no complaint and presently Danvers found himself rather liking the boy. He promoted him to fire a yard engine and before the end of his first year Ben had a freight run.

He was firing for Pete Mabee and under his training rapidly qualified as engineer. For some reason Pete hated Gower more than anyone else. All of his venom was directed against the man for whom he worked.

Ben was glad when Pete was taken on an express run and he was given 763 for himself. He was sitting on the steps of the cab one afternoon eating his lunch while waiting for a special to go by. A party of eastern capitalists were visiting the president of the B. Y. & G. and it was reported that the line was to become a part of a great transcontinental system. Mabee had been talking about it in the roundhouse the night before and predicting all sorts of disaster when the road should pass into alien hands.

The others had shut him up in short order, but the words lingered in Ben's memory and he was talking over the probabilities with his fireman when the station agent came to the door and beckoned wildly to him.

Ben went down the track on a dead run and dashed into the office. The agent was back at the telegraph instrument. "It's Danvers, down at Carson," he explained. "He wants to know if you can find some way of stopping the special. Mabee's running away with it."

"Why not use the derail?" suggested Ben, wondering why it had not been thought of before. The derailing switch was one leading into a sandbank and used for runaway engines.

"The train's going too fast," was the answer. "Mabee's killed his fireman and is firing himself. There's a blind baggage on the front end and they can't get at him."

"How close is he?" asked Ben.

"Just passed Lewis."

"Tell 'em I'll make it," he announced. He dashed out of the office and up the track to where 763 stood panting her impatience over the delay.

He looked anxiously back. The special was tearing up grade. On a curve he could count the cars. There was the baggage and three special coaches. On board were the eastern men and their wives. The chances were that Mabel formed one of the party—and she and they were at the mercy of a maniac. A few miles beyond the road made the famous figure eight curve to drop down a grade. At the speed the special was going they would jump the track and tumble into the gorge.

Ben smiled and slowed up a little. He could see Mabee in the cab dancing and gesticulating. Presently with a mild bump the special hit 763. They were so nearly at one speed that the shock was no more heavy than when a coupling is made. Ben shut off steam and climbed back on the tender. Mabee peered from one of the windows and Ben waved his hand at him.

"Hello, Pete, playing tag?" he called. "I'm coming over to see you." He worked his way to the edge of the tender, dropped down on the pilot of the special, made his way along the running board and presently stepped into the cab window.

"You're running on my time, Pete," he shouted across the cab. "I was told that the special would be held back until I could get out of the way. One of the boys was hurt and I was running to Grant for a doctor."

"You won't need one now," chuckled Mabee. "I've got the whole lot of fiends on board and I'm going to drop 'em down Ayal canyon."

"Who's firing for you?" he asked carelessly, as he looked for the fireman.

"He wouldn't come into the scheme," chuckled Mabee, "so I had to get him out of the way. I threw him off at Parsons, where there's a soft sandbank."

"Great idea," commended Ben. "She needs more coal. I'll fire for you."

He dropped down and threw a few shovels on the flames.

"That's right," Mabee chuckled, "we'll take the whole crowd clean into eternity."

had been filled he climbed up on Mabee's side of the cab and stood behind him.

"I'm going to toll the bell for them," he shouted in the maniac's ear, then climbed back to the fireman's side and began to pull the bell rope.

Mabee shouted with glee at the gruesome joke while Ben pulled with desperate energy. The cord was stout and it was some time before he succeeded in pulling it off the bell. In time his desperate strength won and with a gesture of disgust he cut the rope where it was fastened in the cab and threw it on the floor.

He climbed down after it and fired the engine again. Mabee, unsuspicious, looked ahead to catch the first view of the down grade. He never even turned when Ben climbed on his side a second time. The noosed bell rope slipped down over his body without warning, pinioning his arms to his side, the spare ends were fastened around the post of the window and before Mabee realized what had happened he was securely trussed up.

Ben then climbed past the now helpless man and gradually shut off steam and the special slowed down.

Then there came a rush from the coaches and the train hands sprang into the cab.

Ben staggered unsteadily to the footboard, but as he started to climb down he lurched forward and would have fallen had not Stephen Gower caught him in his arm. The excitement was too much for him and now that the danger was over he fainted dead away.

When he recovered consciousness he was on a sofa in the directors' car.

"Pete will be awfully disappointed," laughed Ben. "It was the chance of his life to destroy capital and now I've spoiled even his belief in human nature."

"It was splendidly done," praised Mabel, pushing forward. "Your fireman was telling us how you made that jump."

"You jumped into a superintendency," said Gower. "I have had some very good reports from Danvers and I have had my mind made up for some time to call you to headquarters. Now that you have proven your ability to act quickly in an emergency I guess I won't wait any longer."

"I guess I'll have to stay engineer long enough to get this train along," said Ben.

Mabel insisted upon climbing into the cab with him.

They were rounding the figure eight when Mabel caught his arm.

"That's where he wanted us to go over?" she asked. Ben nodded.

She put her cheek against his.

"And you saved my life," she murmured. "I cannot realize it even yet."

"You see," he laughed, "I want to marry you. That's why I did it."

"You don't need to make such a strenuous courtship," she laughed as she kissed him, "but I'm proud of you, dear."

SPIRIT THAT COUNTS

YOUNG GIRL LEARNED LESSON AS TO TRUE HOSPITALITY.

Sparsity of Fare Need Never Be a Deterrent to a Cordial Invitation to Sit at Table With the Family.

It was Monday noon. Old Martha, grumbling, was hanging the last of the wash on the line. She really enjoyed washing, and would have been insulted had her mistress suggested sending it out; but being of a pessimistic temperament, she grumbled upon principle.

In the house, Miss Elizabeth and her niece Muriel, who was visiting her, were setting the luncheon on the table. It was a "pickup" luncheon Mondays, Miss Elizabeth explained, as she set two pieces of custard pie and a saucer of snow pudding on the sideboard. Muriel nodded. The family to which she belonged knew all about "pickup" meals. But suddenly a look of consternation swept across her face.

"Aunt Elizabeth!" she cried, "if here isn't a visitor—getting out of a carriage!"

"Bring her out?" Muriel repeated; but her aunt was already opening the door, and Muriel, in an agony of embarrassment, knew that she had not even taken off her green-checked apron. She gave a hasty glance over the table. A little warmed-over fricasseed chicken, left from Sunday's dinner, and some quince preserve from supper, bread and butter and dried beef, radishes and tea—and the two pieces of custard pie and one portion of snow pudding! It could not be that Aunt Elizabeth would bring a visitor out! But she was interrupted by Aunt Elizabeth's voice, cordial and full of pleasure:

"Come right out, Mrs. Reed. We were just sitting down to luncheon. This is my niece, Muriel Hastings. Muriel, will you get Mrs. Reed a plate?"

Muriel set a plate for Mrs. Reed. She could not talk, it all seemed so embarrassing. At home they would have put off luncheon forever rather than ask anyone out—so. She waited in a torture of anxiety for her aunt's excuses. Then slowly she began to realize not only that there were no excuses, but that both ladies seemed to be enjoying themselves. Aunt Elizabeth only laughed when she offered the guest her choice of custard pie or snow pudding.

That evening Muriel suddenly said: "Aunt Elizabeth, I never knew one could have company like that. We never do at home."

Miss Elizabeth's eyes dwelt kindly upon the young face, which already had its tired lines of worry. "Do you like to 'put folks out,' Muriel?"

"Why, no, of course not," the young girl answered.

"Well, then," Miss Elizabeth answered, smiling.

"But it would work only with real ladies," Muriel persisted.

"Well, then," Miss Elizabeth answered again.—Youth's Companion.

Too Much.

In persuasive tones the good-looking woman who had secured an interview with the taxicab manager tried to convince him that the company owed her $2.02.

"Something broke," she said, "and I was held up for 45 minutes while the driver tinkered with the machine."

Her manner was so impressive that the manager was on the point of writing out a check for the money demanded, but before doing so he remarked:

"It certainly was a case of overcharging. It wasn't your fault the cab broke down, and he should not have charged you for the time it took to make repairs."

"O," said she, "he didn't. It isn't overcharging I am complaining about. He made me late for a bargain sale that closed at 11 o'clock, and when I finally got there I had to pay $4 for a blouse that had sold up to 11 o'clock for $1.98. It is the difference I am fighting for."

Then the manager closed his check book.—New York Times.

Osler's Cure for Gout.

Since his proposition that man should be chloroformed at sixty, Dr. William Osler has been regarded more or less as a grim monster by many people, says "One Who Knows Him." In reality Doctor Osler is a mild-mannered man, with a fund of genuine humor, as witness the following cure for gout which he once recommended to a friend:

"First, pick a handkerchief from the pocket of a spinster who never wished to wed; second, wash the handkerchief in an honest miller's pond; third, dry it on the hedge of a person who has never been covetous; fourth, send it to the shop of a physician who never killed a patient; fifth, mark it with a lawyer's ink who never cheated a client; and, sixth apply it, hot, to the gout-tormented part. A speedy cure must follow."

Good Way.

"Yes; we had a big home wedding."

"You say it passed off smoothly?"

"Yes; we hired a Broadway director and he staged it just as if it had been a musical comedy."

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Highest Paid Woman Official in U. S.

WASHINGTON. — Some misguided men in the United States have the idea that their wives boss their incomes, salaries or wages—different words to use in proportion to the amount they receive. This money they receive in bills or coin. The person legally responsible for it is the secretary of the treasury of the United States, who is charged with making all of Uncle Sam's money. But, getting down to real facts, it is somebody else who bosses all the money—Miss Margaret V. Kelly, Uncle Sam's highest paid womaan official.

She gets $5,000 a year. She is assistant director of the mint. Actually the secretary of the treasury has little to do with our coin. Miss Kelly attends to that. There are but four persons between her and the secretary of the treasury, and in their absence she runs things.

As assistant director of the mint Miss Kelly holds such a high official position in the treasury department that it can be truly said that there has never been her equal in the service.

Fifteen years ago, fresh from the Boston schools, Miss Kelly tackled a civil service examination. She passed and fourteen years ago entered the service of the mint bureau as a stenographer. Since that time she has been successively private secretary to the director, adjuster of accounts, examiner, assistant director, and now, when the director is absent from Washington, she signs herself "acting director."

To see her some day acting secretary of the treasury of the United States is no stretch of the imagination, for, if the secretary and the two assistant secretaries, the comptroller of the currency and the treasurer of the United States were to be absent themselves at the same time, and Miss Kelly were then acting director of the mint, it would be "Margaret V. Kelly, Acting Secretary, Treasury Department."

While there are 1,400 employes in the mint service and the responsibilities of the management are great, Miss Kelly held her own as acting director for the last few months.

The salary that Miss Kelly receives, $3,000 a year, is large pay as government salaries go, for Uncle Sam does not believe in paying too well for any service rendered, no matter how valuable.

No Hereditary Descent in Politics

THE passing of great baronial houses in politics is stimulated by the last elections. Another blow has been delivered to the practice in several instances of handing the senatorial toga from father to son. State Senator Arthur P. Gorman, Democrat, of Maryland, was only running for governor to be sure, but it was generally recognized that had he been elected he would soon have become a formidable candidate for the United States senate, where his father of the same name served for many years. The late Senator Gorman started his only son upon a political career by reason of his influence with the state machine, and undoubtedly looked ahead to the day when the son would become a senator.

The Gormans are related to the Davises and Elkinses, of West Virginia, a neighboring state. All three families made considerable money in the same ventures, but not all their money for the late Senator Gorman died a millionaire, the late Senator S. B. Elkins, Republican, died a multi-millionaire, and ex-Senator Henry Gassaway Davis, cousin of Gorman and father-in-law of Elkins, is the richest of them all and close to 90 years old. Young Davis Elkins got into the United States senate a few days last spring on a Gubernatorial appointment, prior to the assembling of the legislature.

Last elections in Maine dashed high hopes for another family succession in the senate. The Maine voters understood pretty well that if Col. Fred Hale had not slipped up on his ambition to get into congress from the First district he would speedily have gone into training for the senate, and had Maine stayed Republican the organization, of which his father, now ex-Senator Hale, was head, would have had a toga waiting for him.

Similarly, over in Vermont, where for a season the late Senator Redfield Proctor held the state as in the hollow of his hand, all the plans had been laid for a senatorial succession from father to son. It proceeded as far as the election of the son to be governor of Vermont, but no farther

Plan Celebration of Perry's Battle

A TENTATIVE design for the Perry memorial to be erected in 1913 at Put-in-Bay, Ohio, in memory of the one hundredth anniversary of Commodore Perry's battle on Lake Erie has been selected here by the joint board, composed of the state boards of nine states which are to participate in the erection of the memorial. The architect has been employed and preparations begun for a celebration which is to last from July 4, 1913, to October 1 of the same year and is to be participated in by almost every city in the Great Lakes.

J. Friedlander of New York was selected for architect, his suggestion for the memorial being accepted as the most satisfactory of 54 submitted. It will be subject to modification, but in the main will be erected as proposed by Mr. Friedlander. Premiums of $1,250, $1,000 and $750 each were awarded to the second, third and fourth designs, according to their mer it as seen by the board.

The memorial is to consist of a plain shaft 330 feet high, erected near the shore of Lake Erie, at a point off which the battle was fought. There is to be a terrace or plaza leading down to the water's edge and on one side will be erected the historical museum, while another is to a memorial building to commemorate the 100 years of peace. The estimated cost of the memorial is $500,000.

As part of the celebration the Niagara, the old flagship of Commodore Perry, which is sunk in Erie harbor, will be raised and made seaworthy. It will then be taken to each of the more prominent of the lake cities during next summer for a stay of a few days in each one. It will be escorted from city to city by vessels of the naval militia and such escort of motor boats and other craft as can be mustered into a fleet.

Fraud Promoters Enriched by Millions

"FROM the final reports submitted by inspectors covering the arrests for the fiscal year it has been ascertained that the promoters of fraudulent schemes who have been put out of business during the past year have obtained approximately $77,000,000 from the public."

This is the astonishing statement made in the annual report of R. S. Sharp, chief postoffice inspector. It will probably be incredible to the average person that there are enough "easy marks" in the United States to contribute $77,000,000 to operators of "get-rich-quick" projects, but, according to the chief inspector, this amount does not represent nearly all that went into the pockets of swindlers. The $77,000,000 is the profits of those who have been caught, and does not take in those who are still operating.

"These fraudulent schemes," said Chief Inspector Sharp, "cover a wide field and are of endless variety, from the simplest business transaction to a gigantic project involving the sale of worthless stock in fake mining companies and fictitious institutions existing only on paper or in the minds of the promoters.

"The result of the year's work has developed the fact that these fraud manipulators are a distinct class of criminals, some moving in the highest social and business circles, but nearly all having more or less affiliations and connection with or are advisors with schemes or enterprises of illegitimate character in which they are known as promoters."

During the fiscal year 1911 522 individuals were indicted on charges of using the mail in furtherance of schemes to defraud.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Cures All Spring Ailments.

Mrs. Marion Bruce, Cumberland, Me., writes: "I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for a great many years, and I think it the best blood medicine in the world. I take it both spring and fall. This last winter and spring I was in very poor health. I was weak and had lost all my appetite and I was all run down. As soon as I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla my strength came back and my appetite returned. I am now well, do my housework, and no longer have that tired feeling."

Proof of Elephant's Sagacity.

Elephants are always quoted as being the most sagacious of animals. A story comes from Bombay, India, of one who saved the life of an artilleryman recently. The man was seated on the tumbril of one of the guns, and fell off almost under the hind wheel. The elephant was just behind the gun and saw the danger the man was in. He lifted the wheel with his trunk, and kept it held up until the carriage had passed quite clear of the man. The act was witnessed by an officer of the artillery.

Love of Jewelry.

Reading that a red chequer homing pigeon, wearing a blue enamel ring marked 1911 L.8945, had been found at Ewell, Surrey, an old lady remarked, says London Punch, that it was terrible how the love of jewelry appeared to be spreading among all classes.

IS SURE OF OBITUARY

ONE REASON WHY MR. SPARROW-GRASS LIVES IN COUNTRY.

There Are Others, of Course, But This One Is Paramount—Sort of a Letter of Recommendation to St. Peter.

One argument against the rush to the cities is the city obituary column. I have known men to lead long, useful and honorable lives in the city and get only four or five lines at last, whereas if they had stayed on the farm the country papers would have given them columns.

We don't have porcelain bathtubs up here in the hills. Steam heaters and janitors are scarce. There's a good deal of snow, too, and no delicatessen around the corner. But there is always the satisfaction of knowing that the local paper will print a fine piece about us when our turn comes to be shoveled on, as Shakespeare puts it.

I may have to raise my own turnips, instead of paying a market gardener three prices to raise them for me, and a grocer six prices for bringing them to me. I may work hard in the sunlight and the air of the fields when I might be lolling in the gaslight and the dust of a factory. I may have to send my children a mile to school instead of two miles to a sweatshop; and perhaps there is a Plymouth Rock rooster on the premises instead of one of them things your newspaper calls pianoletups. I admit the country's disadvantages freely. But when this vale of tears is done with me and I am laid to rest under the pine trees in the old family lot, I know there will be a generous write-up by Editor Green in the Backwoods Weekly Guide, Joyville and Passaic county papers please copy.

I shall not go out like a common critter of the pasture, without a letter of recommendation to St. Peter. There will be a long article right down the middle of the first page, and Lemuel Green will spread himself to make it a first-class job. He will tell the neighbors all the good things in my history that the neighbors can think up to tell him; how I was industrious, sober, honest, patient under trial, kind in prosperity, a loving son, a devoted husband, a fond father, a faithful friend, a man true to principle and spotless in character, a worthy citizen, whose loss is a severe blow to all. Would there were more of my kind.

He will recall my public deeds and private virtues; the time I ran for sheriff on the Prohibition ticket; the poor families I helped shelter the year the dam broke, and the time I carried water to save the Widow Garwin's cottage from the flames and caught my last cold. No matter how lowly my life has been, I shall go out in style and good order, and a loving hand will write "The End" after my own has dropped the pen. You see, Mr. Editor, the country still has something the city can't offer.—"Simon Sparrowgrass" in Newark News.

Women's Convoy Corps.

The mothers and sisters of the Boy Scouts of England, not to be outdone in the matter of home defense, have organized themselves into service companies under strict military orders. It is no idle movement for show or spectacular effect, but the outcome of a serious purpose. In case of war a well-trained body of women fully uniformed and equipped for hospital work and campaign hardships.

Under the general name of the Women's Sick and Wounded Convoy corps, the organization has been in existence for a little over a year and is steadily growing. Riding, camp and hospital cooking, bicycling, home nursing, laundry work, signaling and stretcher drill are included in the training. Riding drills are held monthly after the "raw recruits" are first broken into service. In the stretcher drill a real man is employed to give practice in lifting a body on and off a stretcher, as well as in binding up wounds. Particular attention is paid to dietary kitchen methods, and the preparation of simple dishes that will tempt the jaded appetite of sick and wounded is the subject of practical consideration. The training in every department is as thorough as it is modern.—Harper's Bazar.

Chinese Ingenuity.

"I hope our dear Dr. Wu Ting-Fang is on the right side in these Chinese troubles," said a diplomat at a dinner in Washington.

"Dr. Wu," he continued, "used to tell me many illuminating anecdotes about the Chinese character. I remember one about ingenuity."

"A Chinaman, the anecdate ran, found his wife lying dead on a field one morning—a tiger had killed her.

"The Chinaman went home, procured some arsenic, and, returning to the field, sprinkled it over the corpse.

"The next day the tiger's dead body lay beside the woman's. The Chinaman sold the tiger's skin to a mandarin and its body to a physician to make fear-cure powders, and with the proceeds he was able to buy a younger wife."—Washington Star.

Wonderful Experiences.

"When I was out in the country last summer," said the beautiful chorus girl," I milked a cow."

"Oh, you haven't anything on me," replied the artist's model. "I visited an aunt of mine in the country last fall and one evening I helped her wash the dishes."

SHOT IN HEAD, ROUTS THUGS

Grocer Fires Five Shots at Two Intruders Who Rifle Cash Register and Escape.

Chicago.—Shot through the head by highwaymen who entered his store and held him up about 9 o'clock the other night, Morris Baker, a grocer at 871 Rush street, followed the robbers to the street and fired five shots after them before being overcome by the pain of his wound. The intruders escaped with $30.

Baker was in his store making preparations to close for the night when two men entered and ordered a pound of butter. Baker went to the ice box in the rear of the store and while his back was turned he heard the bell in his cash register jingle. He turned and saw one man with the cash drawer open and the other with a revolver leveled at him. Baker made a rush for the man who was rifling the cash drawer, when the other man fired.

The bullet struck Baker above the left eye and came out through the roof of his mouth, but did not stop him.

He spat out the bullet and, with his mouth full of blood and crushed bone that came with it, grabbed a revolver from beneath the counter and set out in pursuit of the fleeing thugs.

He fired five shots at the robbers before weakness overcame him and Baker fell to the ground unconscious.

Miss Alice Moran, who lives above Baker's store, heard the shots and ran down stairs in time to see the grocer fall. Men who attempted to stop the robbers were threatened with the pistols of the man who injured Baker and the robbers made good their escape. Miss Moran notified the police of the Chicago avenue station and detectives were immediately sent out on the case. They learned that one of the men was tall and the other short, but could get no definite clew as to who they might be.

Baker was taken to the Passavant hospital, where doctors announced that his condition was not serious.

Fog Hard to Pierce.

A dense or thick fog will obscure objects at a distance of 1,000 feet. The recent accident to an ocean steamer of the Anchor line illustrates the fact. An iceberg was run into as soon as seen. After the collision the passengers could hear the echo from their voices reflected by the walls of ice, though the iceberg was invisible to them. Otherwise, there are no echoes at sea.

It was on a Newton-Brighton surface car. The conductor was calling out the names of the streets. Suddenly he called in a clear, loud voice, "Eleanor, Eleanor!" There is a difference of opinion as to whether the joke was on the young lady or the conductor.—Boston Journal.

Use of Cement Saved Bridges.

At Hamburg there are two bridges the masonry of which was threatening to fall in ruins, being traversed by innumerable cracks of varying size. Reports on the present condition of the two bridges are favorable.

DIES AT HIS POST

KNEELING IN PRAYER WHEN HIS LIFE WENT OUT.

Alone in Lighthouse on Chincoteague Island, William Taylor, Keeper, After Twenty-Six Years' Service, Passes Away—Wife Finds Body.

Snow Hill, Md.—At sunset the other day the light from Chincoteague lighthouse did not shine across the waters os Sinepuxent bay nor blink its salutation to its sister light at Assateague, that guards the treacherous channels and dangerous sandbars of the Atlantic eastward of Chincoteague Island. The inhabitants of the island looked and wondered. Never in the history of the lighthouse had such a thing occurred before. There was one woman on the island who knew there was somethng serious the matter. It was the keeper's wife, and she, in her sturdy little gasoline launch, had battled with the ice floes alone a few hours before and come to Chincoteague for much-needed supplies. She and her husband had been icebound since the extreme cold weather of the last few weeks and when she left he was seemingly in the best of health. The ice floes had not torn the lighthouse from its foundations, for at sunset its white wall and red roof were plainly visible. The apparatus must be in working order. But, in this event, the keeper would have rigged a substitute light. But there must be no delay. The light must shine or lives might be lost.

Mrs. Taylor, who is assistant keeper, readily found men to assist her in getting back to the lighthouse and the battle with the ice began. For a time the lighthouse could not be discerned, but at last it was sighted, but nowhere could a light be seen in the house. This forebode evil and as the party drew near and nearer and finally reached the little iron ladder that runs up from the water to the landing platform and were not greeted by the cheerful voice of William Taylor, the keeper, they were convinced that in the few short hours since the departure of the wife something serious had happened.

In a few moments their fears were realized, for they found Taylor kneeling at his bedside as if in the act of prayer. He was dead.

The light shone the next night, guarded by Taylor's wife, who knew that, as she watched, the body of her husband was being carried across the waters of the bay for burial by the friends who had assisted her in reaching her home, and they were being guided by the light which for 26 years he had attended.

William Taylor and his wife had been keeper and assistant keeper of Chincoteague Light since it was established 26 years ago. Never had the government received any complaint as to its management and the keeper and his wife were esteemed by all who knew them.

Resourceful Woman.

Miss Mary Donnelly, cashier of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont's new "suffrage lunchroom" in New York, was praising during an afternoon lull the resourcefulness of her sex.

"Let the anti-suffragists beware," she said. "Woman is bound to get the vote everywhere. She is too resourceful to lose.

"How resourceful woman is! A girl sat in a train one day with an uncut magazine in her hand. She wasn't reading; she couldn't. She was just lifting apart the edges of the uncut leaves and nearly standing on her head to peer at the text and pictures within. So an old gentleman across the aisle took out his knife shyly.

"But the girl didn't look at him. She kept on peering betwen her uncut pages. And finally the old gentleman opened his knife and reached across the aisle, but—

"The girl drew a hairpin from her pretty coiffure and proceeded to cut the leaves briskly.

"The old gentleman drew back and his neighbors smiled, thereupon he said, sotto voce:

"'I've heard that woman can do anything with a hairpin; but, at any rate, she can't sharpen a pencil without a penknife.'

"At that moment the girl, still intently reading, took a pencil from her pocketbook, bit three or four splinters of wood off the end of it, and calmly made a note on the margin of her magazine."

Costly Job.

It was snowing and Miss Urban looked out upon the Newcomb's suburban garden and thought: "How can anybody live in the suburbs?" Just then Mr. Newcomb wandered into the room and she asked: "Who clears off that path to your front gate after a snow?"

"Oh, I have a man do it," he replied.

"It's such a short path, I should think you'd do it yourself," remarked Miss Urban.

"It is less expensive to hire a man," responded Mr. Newcomb. "I tried doing it once myself and it cost me seven dollars. You see, in the first place, I had to buy a snow shovel, that was $1.50. Then I ruined a perfectly good pair of buckskin gloves—that was another $1.50—and then, just as I was in the middle of the job, I caught the string of my eyeglasses in the handle of the shovel and sent the glasses smash against one of the piazza posts; that was four dollars more. I can hire a man to do the job for a quarter."

Ability Must Be Paid For.

One Man's Guide

A few months past in the wilds of Canada a young man but recently graduated from Cornell met a sudden and untimely end. He left no name behind him for great things accomplished, but among his effects after his demise was found a paper in his own handwriting, which bore the caption "My Guide." Stop but a moment, young man, and ponder what a splendid life this young man had lived and contemplate what possibilities were clipped short by this untimely end.

After all, if he had lived for years up to his "guide" and accomplished nothing more it were well worth his while. We heartily commend the following to our readers' notice.

"MY GUIDE"

"It shall be my aim to respect my country, my profession and myself. To be honest and fair with my fellow men, as I expect them to be honest and square with me. To be a loyal citizen of the U. S. A. To speak of it with praise and to act always as a trustworthy custodian of its good name. To be a man whose name carries weight with it wherever it goes.

"To base my expectation of reward on a solid foundation of service rendered; to be willing to pay the price of success in honest effort; to look upon my work as an opportunity to be seized with joy and made the most of and not as a painful drudgery to be reluctantly endured.

"To remember that success lies within myself, and my own brain, my own ambition, my own courage and determination, to expect difficulties and force my way through them; to turn hard experiences into capital for future struggles.

"To believe in my proposition heart and soul; to carry an air of optimism in the presence of those I meet; to dispel ill-temper with cheerfulness; kill doubt with a strong conviction and reduce active friction with an agreeable personality.

"To make a study of my business, to know my profession in every detail; to mix brains with my efforts and use system and method in my work; to find time to do every needful thing by never letting them find me doing nothing; to hoard days as a miser hoards dollars; to make every hour bring me dividends, increased knowledge or healthful recreation.

"To keep my fortune unmortgaged with debts; to save as well as earn; to cut off expensive amusements until I can afford them; to steer clear of dissipation and to guard my health and body and peace of mind as a most precious stock in trade.

"Finally, to take a good grip on the joys of life, to play the game like a man; to fight against nothing so hard as against my own weaknesses and endeavor to grow in strength day by day."

The Annoyance of Hats

(By Mrs. M. J. Wilson)

It is astonishing with what ease some of our women can sit in church, and other public assemblages, under a big hat to the great annoyance and disadvantage of those who wish to see as well as hear the speaker, and not only completely obscuring the view of the people from the speaker, but also completely obscuring the view of the speaker from the face of his audience, thereby detaching from and depriving the speaker of the full effect of his discourse. Do you ask how? Well if you could sit behind your own hat and witness the craning of necks, the groans and sighs, the little unkind reflections, oftimes put into words, you would soon see how. It is very trying to put the speaker to the unpleasant, disagreeable task of exhausting all his wit and tact in endeavoring to have the hats removed, and then to succeed only with those who are thoughtful enough to consider the wishes and rights of others. Now the question is, why do they cling to their hats under these conditions? Is it because they are accustomed to wearing hats in the house at home; or that they have not a mirror to see that every hair is in place, or rats securely covered; or is it that the hat adds to their beauty, or do they not regard anyones wishes but their own? We prefer to think that it is not a selfish or stubborn motive.

Sisters, Easter is coming again. Which shall it be, a remembrance of a risen Savior, or a hat show? But we do not altogether dispair, as we did two or three years ago when no hats were removed in church, and the male attendance dwindled down to about ten in every congregation, and were driven to the base ball, card parties, and goodness knows what all. They will not bury themselves in a bank of feathers and hats. Now that some hats are removed, and the male attendance is somewhat regained, let us whose sex the Maker intended should exalt man, remove the remainder of these obstacles, and regain the attendance of the remainder of our manhood.

Let Golden West Cleaning and Dyeing Co. do your work for you. Putnam's are their agents in Campbell.

FLORAL SHOW AND MAY FETE

Which is a feature of the Santa Clara County Fair will be held on May 1st. closing with a beautiful May fete. Preparations are progressing rapidly, the schools all over the County are enthusiastic. Many have planned to make exhibits and have assured the committee of their earnest support and co-operation. Each Principal of every school in the City and County is asked to be Chairman of the committee from his school selecting his own committee of workers and they to prepare and present a flower display.

There will be many fine prizes for the various classes and everything will be done to encourage the educational side.

All flowers displayed at the floral County fair must be grown in Santa Clara County. The collection of wild flowers need not be bulky as one speciman will recieve as much attention and recognition as a mass of the same flowers. Besides cultivated and wild flowers, shrubs grasses, pressed flowers and potted plants will be exhibited.
